From the Pulpit

I traveled to Cayman Brac this past week in order to make a pastoral visit and celebrate Mass. Upon seeing the island, I can honestly say that there is still a lot of work to be done in order to get life back to normal on Cayman Brac. It is hard to believe what a difference a few miles can make when it comes to a hurricane.

The first thing that struck me as I got off the plane was that there was hardly a leaf left on a tree. It almost appeared as if all the trees had died. In a weird sort of way, it almost looked like a winter day in Michigan without the snow. Most of the buildings on Cayman Brac sustained some damage, and perhaps half of the buildings had significant roof damage. Some of the buildings were so damaged that they will have to bulldoze the remains and rebuild from scratch. The little cottage that has been converted into a chapel where we are having Mass until the church is built, that also sustained some damage. As a result, we were unable to have Mass there. Because of this, Mass was done in one of our parishioner's home. Fortunately, the damage done to the chapel appears to be easily fixable.

Everyone has generators and tarps. The people are also able to get food and water. Most people however do not have power restored to their homes. There are still a lot of power lines that are down all over the island and it is going to take awhile before it is all back up and running. What lies immediately ahead for the residents on the Brac is the reality that it is going to take a lot of work to clean up and a lot of man hours and construction to fix the things that need to be fixed. In some cases, it will take some money on the people's part as well because not everyone was insured.

One other observation I noticed when I was on Cayman Brac is that I was impressed with the resiliency of the people, and that despite the problems they were experiencing, they were still as friendly as ever. And yet at the same time, I also noticed among some a certain sense of malaise with all of the destruction around them. Even though everyone is trying to put their best foot forward, I have to believe that deep down inside there is still some anxiety that they must be feeling in regards to their situation. This is why it is so important for us to contribute to the relief effort for Cayman Brac. Anything that we can do to assist them in getting back on their feet, the better.

God Bless,
Fr. Paul Ballien

SUNDAY REFLECTION

The Ruler of our Life

Commentary...

There is a story about American missionaries in August 1977 who stayed with a group of nuns in a convent in Nairobi, Africa. One morning at breakfast, the Americans were greeted with the news "Your king has died". Because of the puzzled look on their faces, the nun repeated, "Your king has died". Finally, the bearer of this confusing and surprising news said, "Elvis Presley, your king of the rock, has died".

This is a good illustration of the fact that the same words don't always carry the same meaning in all cultures. In different contexts they express different meanings.

This week we celebrate the last Sunday of the church year. We name it the Feast of Christ the King. Despite effort of some, Jesus Christ is not a king in the realm of the entertainment world. Nor is he one who rules over us in the political sense. He is more like the kind of ruler we see on the prayer table. It is an inanimate object, but Christ is alive. He is the ruler we think of when we set up the standard by which to measure our Christian life. His life is the standard of compassion, justice, and generosity by which we measure our lives. Just how has he influenced your values, your actions, and even your dreams this year?

We discover his path in the gospels. We learn what ruled him and how he built his life around that. We learn how he listened in prayer to his Father, and how he defended those undervalued by society. This list is a long one: lepers, tax collectors, women and children, prostitutes, the poor.

He reached out to them as he reaches out to us. He moves them to follow him and to live and love in the same way he did. His was a life of invitation. His was an open life. In this he found his joy. In this he also discovered suffering. His path leads to the fullness of life.

How fully do we take into our lives the patterns that ruled his life? This feast invites us to welcome Christ more deeply into our hearts and into our lives. We do this when we welcome him in our neighborhoods, in the poor, in the sick and homebound, in the youngest among us.

Jesus is our dependable measure. Let us live gratefully with him as our rule of life, as the standard, we use for seeking and living the fullest of lives.

For Your Reflection....

- What characteristic of Jesus do you feel drawn to imitate more closely?
- Who is someone you wanted to imitate when you were young? Why?
- What else do you need to do to give priority to Christ in your life?
- How fully is Christ the ruler of your heart?
- How well do you measure up against the standard of a life ruled by gospel values?
- When lately have you met Christ in the least ones in the world around you?
